1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a transparent conductive film to be used for various display devices such as a liquid crystal display, plasma display, electroluminescence display and a touch panel, and a method for producing the same. The invention also relates to a display device using the transparent conductive film.

2. Description of the Related Art An indium tin oxide (ITO) film is a kind of transparent conductive film that has been mainly used for such as a film used as a transparent electrode of a display such as a liquid crystal display, plasma display or electroluminescence display and a film used as a touch panel electrode. Recently, a transparent conductive film having a smaller specific resistance and a higher resistance to chemicals has been required with a high definition display and a touch panel. To obtain such a transparent conductive film, a sputtering method, a vacuum vapor deposition method or a chemical vapor deposition method is used. Among these methods, a chemical vapor deposition method is a simple method. Moreover, the film thickness is controlled in a vacuum chamber. Thus, the production cost is low. However, the chemical vapor deposition method involves a problem that the manufacturing time is long. A film is generally produced by forming a single film by a vacuum vapor deposition method and by using a reactive gas and then by performing heat treatment. In this case, a step of forming the single film using the vacuum vapor deposition method is needed before the heat treatment. Thus, the manufacturing time is long. A plasma treatment can be used as a method of forming a single film to solve such a problem. However, it is difficult to form a high-quality film by such a plasma treatment, and it is difficult to introduce a reactive gas into a vacuum chamber. Furthermore, a step of forming an electrode for plasma generation is needed. Thus, the manufacturing cost is high. Moreover, the plasma treatment has a disadvantage that the plasma damages a vacuum chamber in the worst case. To avoid the above problem, Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open (JP-A) Nos. 63-146660, 07-133685 and 09-125332 suggest a method for forming a film using a vacuum

Oral comprehension skills were learned at an early age in the native-language environment. The difficulty of accomplishing the parallel task was further compounded when the child was exposed to a new language, different cultural and linguistic background and the native language was suppressed. In addition to listening, the very important component of language acquisition is learning the whole word list in the target language. listening translation Audio-visual-listening-speaking (AVLS) course for elementary Indonesian children. Application: teaching spoken language and the main language in Indonesia, such as Bahasa Indonesia, Bahasa Malayu, and, for older students, Bahasa Singapura and/or English as the second language. A markerless bacterial chromosome as a tool for chromosome elimination in yeast. The yeast Saccharomyces cerevisiae was transformed with a purified prokaryotic plasmid, pZ123, containing an origin of replication and a marker that confers antibiotic resistance. This plasmid contains an extrachromosomal DNA molecule, pZ123X, that has lost its bacterial origin of replication, and its replication is therefore dependent on the host chromosomal dnaA gene. After transformation with pZ123 and subsequent induction of dnaA expression, extra chromosomes were observed at the same cell cycle stages as the complete chromosome set, and these contained the foreign DNA but lacked the bacterial marker. In addition, all the extra chromosomes that were produced were unstable in the absence of selection for antibiotic resistance. Conventional kilns such as rotary type and regenerative type kilns are large, multi-functional, highly-automated, expensive, and consume considerable energy, all of which are undesirable in the wood products manufacturing industry 3da54e8ca3
