What's new:

Rule #2: Raids have to have bosses. 2d4 hours ago

Rule: All special rule bosses have to be fought only by ranged attackers, with the exception of bosses that decrease an enemy's HP.

Every boss in the Lands Between will have some kind of defensive vulnerability that makes it more susceptible to being killed. A boss isn't entirely vulnerable, and sometimes the only way to kill a boss is to overcome a defensive monster. The boss decides the progression of the battle, and an unexpected change in the boss's ability (e.g., increasing in strength, increasing in speed) makes it difficult to overcome the boss. Battle strategies vary depending on the boss, and players have free reign to decide the strategy used in a battle.

Here are some examples of bosses:

- A set of a few bosses can be a preparation for the fight against a powerful boss that's yet to appear.
- A rare boss can suddenly appear in a corner of the dungeon, making it impossible to attack the boss's weak point.
- A notable boss can appear, distracting all the other enemies.
- The remaining enemies are defeated by how boring the boss is, and the boss is slain with no battle.
- The environment remains the same, but the boss's ability becomes increasingly tough the further into the dungeon you advance, making it increasingly difficult to defeat him.
