receptor (EGFR) gene appears to be the predominant cause of various malignancies in people, including one of the most common cancers, non-small-cell lung cancer (NSCLC). Since 2002, mutations in this gene have been reported to occur in more than 10% of NSCLCs, and germline mutations are present in at least 50% of patients with NSCLC. The researchers analyzed more than 900 patients for mutations in EGFR that have so far been identified in NSCLC and reported that these mutations were responsible for the abnormal EGF receptor pathway. They divided these mutations into two groups: "Exon 19 deletions," in which a small piece of the EGFR gene is missing "Exon 19 insertions," in which a large 1cdb36666d
