in my life had been sufficient. “Your ears are ringing”? How could that be? I thought, glancing at my buddies and telling them of my experience. One of them called a neurologist. “It’s probably nothing,” he told me. “I’m going home.” He went home. I’m not saying that things like this never happen. They do. If you looked it up on the Internet, you could find pages of comments about people who came home from a business lunch and were overcome with feelings of intense ringing in the ears, some of whom were sent home by their doctors with the diagnosis of a “touch of vertigo.” For others, the problem was with a particular ear, or occasionally both, and that’s when, all too often, a sense of isolation set in and people panicked.
