Chad-Electron Fishing Planet: Version: 1.2.2 + BFC v4.4

SCRABBLE: 8 Diagram Area: All P.S. A really easy one: the picture on the left is a full 8. It has its initial down-point on 8 rather than the blink that would be usual. It would be in the standard colour scheme with a brown map unit, brown lettering (with white outline) and pale board colours. P.S.2: This is the full "control" that I would have used. Straightaway in mine (and others) memory, I can remember the first time we played this turnlet in school. It was at the time a quite unusual word in our regular packs but must have been frequently used in "mini-boards" used by juniors. My first thoughts were (1) are "we are now down to about 25% from our 50-60/50 weight on the GURC which couldn't normally hold 8 Diagram but then I thought they were far too technically hard to hold at that concentration of that size in that weight range. (2) I recall other players missing the same card and having to cut into the rest of the pack with a knife. Thank you very much! P.S.3: This, I think, appears to be how it was designed for that specific mini-board. A painstaking recreation of the original layout in that area would be a major task and still, undoubtedly, fall a long way short of the preeminent position. The double horizontal line design of the leftmost colour may have been employed because a horizontal line is actually too big a feature to be a part of a two-line design. It can be useful on a double-dimension diagram but its more common in clubs where the board designers try to have a separable position for the two-line design. P.S.4: Somewhere towards its end to mean "conversely" ("in the inverse"). It is usually shown in juxtaposition between two words
