Search form You are here A few years back, I was at a website that had an audio segment in which they were touting a very powerful tool for getting things done. It was a tool, but only with the right mindset and training. These people were supposed to be able to get a person everything they wanted done. So they were "The Lottery People" because everyone wanted one. And they saw the graph in the e-marketing section of the website that said that the people who wanted them lived all over the globe. So they thought, "Well, that would mean that we could represent everyone." They had a website for Lottery People, and they even had a Buy 1 Get 1 Free coupon and little red balloons to symbolize the fact that everyone was lucky, and the more you bought, the more you got. Now, I'm not suggesting that you change the strategy (want, need, want, need, want), but what you may want to consider is how you are going to spend the time you gain. The Lottery People are great people to sign up. Actually, they are the only ones who are really going to sign up for anything. They are going to invest the time and energy. But if that's what you get in return, you have to get the most out of the situation. You may be tempted to think, "I can get 50 of them in to my dealership and that will just give me a number." I've heard quite a few opinions on this: You can't get 50. It is not the way to do it. You have to train them and work with them. They have to feel that it will be worth their time. They have to perceive the potential value of your model. You have to help them develop their skills and provide adequate training. You have to be able to discern who has what it takes. So, just because you reach out to 50 people, doesn't mean it will be that many people who take action. And it may not be 50 at all. You could produce a DVD or publish a weekly newsletter that goes out to 50 people, and you need to start by one, and have a single dealership that provides training. About
