Keisler, an assistant attorney general in the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), says in an interview with the New York Times that the administration failed to enforce an immigration law that required that all illegal aliens be deported after a court-ordered sentence of incarceration. The law's failure comes at a crucial time when a federal court has ordered the deportation of some of the 10,000 illegal aliens who live in the U.S. The ruling orders illegal aliens to be rounded up and deported from the U.S. by the end of September. Since announcing the judicial order in May, immigration officials and illegal aliens have put together an apparatus to gather the masses and put them on buses to their supposed countries of origin. The effort, which began in June, is almost complete. But the Obama administration has been stalling on enforcing the deportation of illegal aliens, arguing that there is no law to force them to 6d1f23a050
